

Teaching Philosophy

Joel Jupp

Education is the process of engaging learners in order to transform thinking, attitude, and behavior. For that reason, classroom instruction should engage all kinds of learners and allow students to participate in their learning process. Students learn best when they help guide their own learning experience. A classroom, therefore, should be learner-centered rather than teacher-centered.

In this effort, I incorporate various teaching methods, creative uses of technology, and differentiated instruction, so that students can better engage with the material. I strive to develop lessons where students use their education in practical ways, so that they will experience, apply, and remember what they are learning.
